Adjunct Teaching Opportunity – Psychology

Prescott College seeks applicants for part-time, in-person, adjunct positions in Psychology for the 2027 Spring term and forward. In anticipation of expected enrollment growth, the college is building a pool of potential adjunct instructor(s). Our unique and experiential pedagogy supports our holistic approach to psychology and well-being intended to equip students with skills and knowledge to pursue professional careers in mental health and psychology. Teaching might include foundational psychology courses such as Introduction to Psychology and Lifespan Development, as well as specialty courses including Psychopathology and Health, Foundations of Critical Psychology, Ecopsychology, Women's Psychology and Sexuality, and other mental health focused topics.

Candidates should have undergraduate teaching experience in Psychology in classroom, site-based, and/or hybrid settings. A Ph.D. in Psychology and evidence of research experience is preferred. Academic and subject areas in alignment with Prescott College values include (but are not limited to): ecopsychology; environmental psychology; cultural and multicultural psychology; critical psychology, decolonial and Indigenous psychologies, feminist/queer studies; culturally-responsive mental healthcare and counseling; specific community health issues; global community contexts; and more. Our ideal candidates will bring knowledge and experience working in academic and/or applied settings such as human/social services, community health, and within movements or institutions working for social and/or environmental justice.
